The musical programme consisted of Wesleyan hymns, and there were a number of interesting addresses. It was originally intended to have the exercises entirely in the hands of laymen of the Methodist churches of the city, but this was finally found impracticable. Capt. W. B. Smithers, who was to have talked on "What a Young Man Can Do," was unavoidably absent and the subject was the control of discussed in an interesting manner by Rev.

A distressing accident occurred near St. Asaph Junction late Saturday evening by which George T., the six-year-old son of Mr. John Harrison, foreman at the Alexandria Steam Bakery, was Aldermen directing the City Engineer at the Alexandria Steam Bakery, was fatally injured by being run over by a freight train. The unfortunate child was playing about the cars when the train started, and was caught under the wheels. He was brought to this city in an unconscious and dying condition, and lived about an hour after his arrival at the Alexandria Hospital. Both of the child's legs were severed from the body, one near the thigh and the other near the knee. His skull was fractured and one near the thigh and the other near the knee. His skull was fractured and he was otherwise cut and bruised. Dr. O'Brien was called to attend the sufferer, but he saw the child's condition was of such a nature that his death was but a matter of a short time.

Unsightly Intersections. The intersections of King and Fayette and Cameron and Fayette streets are in an unsightly and disagreeable condition, and people compelled to visit those lo-calities often have their attention called to them. The steam and electric trains splash water, which is always under the tracks every time they pass over them, while the rails are depressed by the heavy locomotives. The cowcatchers of the engines occasionally hang in the planking and it may be but a matter of time when a train will be derailed and significantly the state of the search o serious damage be the result.
